Each day the chicken lays one egg with magical properties. After a day, the first egg becomes a mundane rotten egg.

An elf or wizard may eat the egg as part of casting a spell. The caster gains +1d3 on the Spell Check. If the result indicates any kind of spell failure, the caster loses the ability to speak and can only cluck like a chicken for the next 1d6 rounds. Plus the character suffers any other ill effects of rolling poorly. Any other class eating an egg gains a Minor Corruption.
